TWO MONTANANS AMONG RHODES SCHOLARSHIP CANDIDATES

MISSOULA --

Andrew J. Vliet III, a University of Montana senior in wildlife biology, and Michael McFaul, a Stanford University student from Bozeman, have been named Rhodes Scholarship candidates for the Northwestern District.

Vliet, a native of Honolulu, and McFaul, a senior majoring in international relations and Slavic languages, will represent Montana at the Northwestern District Committee meeting in Seattle Saturday, Dec. 14.

Four Rhodes Scholars will be chosen at the district meeting from candidates hailing from Montana, Alaska, Idaho, North Dakota, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming. Thirty-two Rhodes Scholars will be chosen nationwide.

Rhodes Scholars are eligible for two years of study at Oxford University in England, with a possibility of a third year if necessary.
